BIG LINER ON FIRE AT SEA; 1,400 PASSENGERS IN PANIC

The Nord America Arrives in Port from Naples with a Thrilling Story of Peril Encountered on Passage.

For a day and a night the crew of the Veloce line steamer Nord America fought the flames which had broken out in the ship's forward coal bunkers on her last trip from Naples to New York, which ended when, smoke-begrimed and manned by white-faced officers, she crept into port to-day after one of the most thrilling struggles with fire a transatlantic liner has ever passed through.

The Nord America left Naples on Sept. 13. In her steerage were thirteen hundred and thirty-three passengers. Her first cabin held eighty-five voyagers. For the first few days out all went well, and then when the big vessel was six days nearer to America the most dreaded of all sea perils broke out.

The passengers had finished their evening meal and were looting about the deck enjoying the fine evening when from the ventilator of the forward coal bunker came a tiny blue wisp of smoke. The immigrants thought nothing of it, but it was a gray-faced engineer who reported to Capt. Barbieri.

BUNKERS AGLOW WITH FLAME.

Without a word to the passengers the coal passers were put to work to find where the flames were eating their way into the bunkers.

When they finally located the blaze it was seen at once by the officers that they were face to face with a bad fire. The coal had been loaded damp and the whole mass was aglow with flames that only needed a puff of wind to fan them into destructive fury.

The immigrants were ordered forward while the hatches were taken off in order that water might be poured on the glowing coals, but when the battens were hammered off and a dense cloud of yellow smoke rolled out a scream went up from them.

"The ship is on fire! We shall die!" they screamed, running to and fro. Women clutched their babies and hurried to the rail. Then a man's voice called:

"To the boats! Lower the boats!"

The crowd took it up. Wild-eyed men and women pressed forward. Some of them wielded knives. The crew fought them back, but they pressed in with the strength of terror.

SEA BEGINS TO RISE.

To add to the horrors of the situation the sea began to rise. Capt. Barbieri saw that a boat launched in such weather would have no chance of life in the heavy seas. He ordered revolvers issued to the crew. Then he stepped up to the bridge and hailed the panic-stricken crowd of immigrants.

"You will be safe if you trust to us," he said, "but the first man who tries to do a rope or to rush the boat will be shot."

The terrified crowd quieted down as they listened and presently the crew drove them below. Then the whole ship's company turned to and fought the fire with steam. It was stubborn and several times it looked as if the ship would have to be abandoned, but they stuck to their work and at last the smoldering mass of coal was extinguished.

In the panic a woman named Julia Pizzamonte, who was coming here to meet her husband, died of a hemorrhage caused by excitement as she fought with the frenzied crowd at the boats to save her children's lives.

Miss Elsie Lathrop, of 140 West One Hundred and Fiftieth street, was one of the cabin passengers on the fire-stricken ship. Miss Lathrop,

HUGHES HEADS TICKET; WOODRUFF IS MANAGER

Candidate's Only Pledge: "To Do My Duty and to Keep Office Free from the Taint of Bossism or Servitude to Private Interests."

DUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 26.—Hearst is likely to be nominated for Governor to-night by the Democratic State Convention.

Two sessions were held to-day, but both were brief, owing to the protracted fights over the contesting delegations. There were twenty of these contests, and when the convention met this morning the committee had not completed its work. A recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock, but at that hour another recess was declared until 6.30 P. M.

It is the hope of the Hearst managers and Charles F. Murphy that the convention will quickly dispose of the report of the Committee on Credentials, adopt the platform and proceed to the nomination of Hearst. William Sulzer went into the Tammany caucus at 5 o'clock this afternoon and fought against the adoption of the unit rule. He protested against a rule that would force men who are for him through sympathy and inclination to cast their votes for Hearst.

"I am going into that caucus," said Mr. Sulzer, "to represent myself, and I am going to call for a show down. I have friends in the Tammany delegation who want to vote for me, and the unit rule is not to close my mouth or prevent me from being heard."

The caucus was turbulent and some bitter accusations were hurled at Charles F. Murphy, but he would not be moved from his determination to cast the 105 votes of the delegation for Hearst.

CHILDREN FIND AN OLD PISTOL; THEN ARE SHOT

One eight-year-old boy in dying in Bellevue Hospital with a 2-calibre bullet-hole straight through his body, and a ten-year-old boy and an eight-year-old girl, each with a bullet-wound in the arm, are supposed to be wandering on the east side in a search for St. Mark's Hospital, as the result of a rummaging which discovered an old revolver in a trunk in the squallid rear tenement-house at No. 48 East Eleventh street, late this afternoon.

The whole neighborhood is in a state of frenzied excitement and the residents have had a hard time calming the people.

Joseph Manno, who is eight years old and lives on the first floor, Josephine Serito, of the fourth floor, also eight years old, and a dozen other small children gathered to play with ten-year-old Salvatore Rosetti in his home on the third floor.

They had great fun rummaging in an old trunk belonging to Salvatore's father, Giuseppe Rosetti. Presently Salvatore turned up a rusty old revolver. The six children were teased and the hammer was up. Suddenly it went off in the little host's hands. The bullet pierced little Joe Manno's abdomen, and passed clear through his body, lodging in the wall behind him. Joe dropped to the floor. The other children shrieked in terror and began to scatter.

The pistol cracked again, and the bullet lodged in the arm of the tiny girl Josephine Serito.

The third bullet caught Salvatore in the arm near the shoulder and forced him to drop the pistol, alas the list of casualties might have been longer.

The children ran screaming down into the courtyard and thence out by a narrow passage through the front tenement to Eleventh street.

Policeman Henry on the corner, heard the screaming and ran toward this scene of ramshackle tenement horror in the Sicilian colony. He sent out an ambulance call, and as the shriek of women in the big tenements went to earlier in a panic condition, sent to the station for the reserves.

An ambulance surgeon gathered little Joe Manno up and hurried him to Bellevue, where he will probably die, but Salvatore Rosetti and Josephine Serito were nowhere to be seen. In the excitement and panic they had disappeared.
